Sending Forth

John Wesley defined the essence of Christianity as nothing more than love: “loving God with all our heart and soul and strength, as having first loved us, as the fountain of all the good we have received, and of all we ever hope to enjoy; and the loving of every soul which God hath made, every [person] on earth, as our own soul. This love we believe to be the medicine of life, the never-failing remedy for all the evils of a disordered world, for all the miseries and vices of the human race.”

Our faith must be lived out in day-to-day living, which results in service. Wesley spoke of “vital religion” being faith working through love. Our Christian responsibility is to serve the kingdom of God in the arena in which we live.

The Methodists were taught to live out their faith in love.

The Wesley brothers believed that it was not enough to save people’s souls, we must also redeem society.

Wesley saw Methodism as a way to reform the nation by spreading scriptural holiness throughout the land.

Wesley published “Thoughts upon Slavery” and often preached against slavery. William Wilberforce, a brilliant parliamentarian, and John Newton were also forces against slavery in Britain.

God has broken our chains, not for our own benefit alone, but that we might free the chains of others. We are saved so that we might continue to live love in this world and make a difference.

As Methodists, we continue to live out our faith in various ways.

We live out our faith in love, love for God and love for others. And we do all this, because God first loved us and sent his Jesus into the world to die for us. This is love, love lived out.
